

Misdemeanor and Traffic Offenses

Rockville Traffic Violation Defense Lawyers

Even a simple traffic ticket can affect your driving privileges. In Washington, D.C., and Maryland, a point system is applied to individual traffic offenses, such as speed tickets or reckless driving. Traffic tickets can quickly add up to substantial points against your driving record. If too many points build up, you risk having your driving license suspended or revoked.

At the law firm Joseph, Greenwald & Laake, P.A., we understand the domino-effect traffic violations can ultimately have on your driving privileges. Every traffic violation has the potential to cause a spike in your insurance rate, fines from the Department of Motor Vehicles (DMV) and points against your driving record. Do not delay — contact our law firm today to schedule a free initial consultation. Our firm's Rockville traffic violation defense attorneys will take every step possible to help you maintain a clean driving record.

Fighting Traffic Violations in Maryland and Washington, D.C.

The traffic violation defense attorneys at our firm are committed to representing motorists and commercial drivers accused of a wide range of traffic violations, including:

Speeding tickets Reckless driving Turning without a blinker Seat belt violations Lane violations Running a red light Stop sign violations

Most misdemeanor traffic violations are punishable with one to two points applied against your driving record. The suspension of your driver's license for one year could become a real possibility if you accumulate four points against your record in one year, six points over 24 months, or eight points over 36 months. A moving traffic violation could cause your driving privileges to be suspended for at least 30 days.

Our firm's traffic ticket defense attorneys will aggressively defend your driving privileges. As part of our approach, we will determine if law enforcement had a valid reason to pull your car over, such as:

Speeding Driving unusually slow Reckless driving Swerving between lanes
